

The Partition of Africa

Chunk #1

The Scramble for Africa is the general label for the period of European colonialism in Africa in the late 19th century. In 1885, fourteen European powers got together in Berlin and literally took out a map and drew a bunch of lines and carved up the continent of Africa.

It's really important to clarify that this is not the starting point of European colonialism of Africa. It's actually just a change in the way that the Europeans approached it.

Before the 1880s, partially due to their own technologies or philosophies, the Europeans were largely just around the outside of the continent. For example, in West Africa, there's the slave trade that had been going on for several hundred years. Different European countries had forts on the coastlines, but they didn't really go into the continent itself. You have the Dutch, who set up the Cape Colony at the very southern point in 1652, but you don't really see a large concentration of Europeans inland until the late 1800s. And there's no discussion of who gets what until the 1880s.

The reason that the European powers met in 1885 was largely to not have war because they were afraid that they were heading for a major conflict in the struggling for position in colonies, and not just in Africa. There was a lot of grabbing for prestige among the European powers—this was largely a European problem that was played out on the continent of Africa.

Two VIPs	Before the 1800s, what were Europeans doing in Africa?

Chunk #2

Europeans first became interested in Africa for trade route purposes. They were looking for ways to avoid the taxes of the Arab and Ottoman empires in Southwest Asia. Sailing around Africa was the obvious choice, but it was a long voyage and could not be completed without “pit stops” along the way. Europeans created ports in southern and eastern Africa so traders could restock supplies before crossing the Indian Ocean.

During the 16th century, Portuguese explorers became engaged in the African slave trade. They kidnapped Africans and forced them to work on plantations and mines in their colonies in the New World. Other European countries soon participated in the slave trade as well. The transAtlantic slave trade lasted from the 1500s to the mid-1800s. Even after the slave trade had ended, European interest in Africa was still going strong. European countries saw that Africa was a continent full of vast natural resources and mineral wealth.

Why was Europe interested in Africa?

Chunk #3

During this time, many European countries expanded their empires by aggressively establishing colonies in Africa so that they could exploit and export Africa's resources. Raw materials like rubber, timber, diamonds, and gold were found in Africa. Europeans also wanted to protect trade routes.

During the 1800s, Europeans moved further into the continent in search of raw materials and places to build successful colonies. Great Britain, France, & Germany fought over control of land that is now Egypt and Sudan. Belgians took control of the Congo. The natives often fought against the European powers; however, they often lost because the European weapons were superior. The Zulu nation fought the British in South Africa and the Ashanti struggled to hold onto what is now Ghana.

Chunk #4

Economic Reasons Economic motivation played a large part in the colonization of Africa. The 1800s was a time of great industrialization in Europe (Industrial Revolution). Factories required raw materials that could be manufactured into marketable products. When Europeans returned to Africa for more resources they brought back the manufactured goods and sold them to Africans. Africa became a new market for Europe to sell goods.

Political Reasons Politics in Europe also led to the colonization of Africa. Nationalism, a strong sense of pride in one's nation, resulted in competition between European nations. No major nation wanted to be without colonies, which led to this "Scramble for Africa". The competition was particularly fierce between Great Britain, France, and Germany, the strongest European nations in the 1800s.

Religious Reasons Christian missionary work gained strength during the 1800s as European countries were becoming more involved in Africa. Many missionaries were supportive of the colonization of Africa because they believed that European control would provide a political environment that would help missionary activity. The idea of "Christianizing" Africa also made many Europeans look favorably on the colonization of the continent.

Two VIPs	What is nationalism and how did that affect colonization?

Chunk #5

Berlin Conference By the 1880s, Great Britain, France, Germany, Belgium, Spain, and Portugal all wanted part of Africa. To prevent a European war over Africa, leaders from fourteen European governments and from the United States met in Berlin, Germany, in 1884. No Africans attended the meeting. At the meeting, the European leaders discussed Africa's land and how it should be divided.

Going into the meeting, roughly 10% of Africa was under European colonial rule. By the end of the meeting, European powers "owned" most of Africa and drew boundary lines that remained until 1914. Great Britain won the most land in Africa and was "given" Nigeria, Egypt, Sudan, Kenya, and South Africa after defeating the Dutch Settlers and Zulu Nation. The agreements made in Berlin still affect the boundaries of African countries today.

Why do you think African nations were not invited to the conference?

Chunk #6

Artificial Boundaries European powers organized Africa's population in ways to make the most efficient workforce, ignoring the natives' cultural groups or existing political leadership at the time of colonization. Sometimes they grouped together people who had never been united under the same government before. Sometimes they divided existing groups of people. The creation of these borders had a negative impact on Africa's political and social structures by either dividing groups that wanted to be together or combining ethnic groups that were enemies.

Europeans placed colonies into administrative districts and forced the Africans to go along with their demands. In order to establish their indirect rule, Europeans used local chiefs as their enforcers in the colonies. Europeans also tried to assimilate Africans (have African people give up their own African customs and adopt European customs). Protests and revolts were common and starvation and disease became widespread.

Two VIPs

Why were the boundaries that Europe created bad for Africa?

Chunk #7

Lasting Effects Europeans took the best land by force. African farmers were forced to grow cash crops like cocoa and coffee, causing there to be a shortage of food in many areas of Africa. Africans were forced to work under terrible conditions on plantations, railways, and logging. In order to gain power, Europeans encouraged Africans to fight against each other. New political boundaries caused ethnic groups to clash. This has led to ethnic and political unrest in Africa today. There have been over 50 ethnic conflicts in Africa since WWII as a result of the colonial lines drawn by Europeans.

Africa Unrest By the mid-twentieth century, Africans began to openly oppose European control of their countries. It was obvious that colonialism was not fair, as it only benefited the Europeans. Africans were tired of being treated like second-class citizens on their own land. They soon begin to demand freedom for themselves...
